

Jim Hull is a policy analyst for the Center for Public Education. Hull has summarized and authored reports for a variety of audiences on such current issues as international assessments, NAEP, growth models, and late high school graduates. His work for the Center has been cited in articles in such media outlets as Education Daily, Education Week, the Washington Post and the Associated Press.

Before coming to the Center Hull was a data analyst at the Education Trust, a Washington, DC based non-profit organization that advocates for poor and minority students. He was also an intern for the New York State Education Department assisting with its implementation of the No Child Left Behind Act and also served as an economic research assistant at the Federal Reserve Board of Governors.

Hull is a proud graduate of Quinnipiac University in Hamden, Conn. where he earned degrees in Economics and Information Systems Management. He went on to earn a Masters of Education degree at Teachers College, Columbia University focusing on Politics and Education with a concentration in Education Policy.